

WOMEN LEADING IN THE TWENTY FIRST CENTURY

This seminar will provide a synopsis of leadership principles and practices that comprise essential elements for leadership success in the twentyfirst century.

Specific challenges faced by female leaders, as well as leadership growth, development, and maintenance skills will also be explored.

Thanks and please advise if additional information is needed.

Joyce Johnson

Joyce Johnson

Joyce Johnson is a native of Collierville, Tennessee. She graduated from the University of Memphis with a Bachelor of Arts degree in Criminal Justice and

Sociology (1979) and a Masters of Science in Guidance and Personnel Services

(1982). She is currently a Ph.D. candidate at Andrews University in Berrien Springs, Michigan. Having completed all coursework as well as her dissertation study, she anticipates having her doctorate conferred in January 2003.

With over 20 years of leadership experience, Joyce has successfully produced exemplary results, provided leadership education, and a variety of professional and personal development programs in government and a fortune 100 corporation (Federal Express).

She was a 1998 recipient of Federal Express's most prestigious corporate award from the CEO, the FIVE STAR, for outstanding leadership. Other accomplishments include design and delivery of leadership development programs for the Corporation's 7,000+ members of management around the world.

She has conducted staff development training for multiple cultures around the globe.

Joyce is currently a leadership development consultant and adjunct faculty member in the School of Education at Jackson State University.

Areas of expertise: Leadership (all aspects, including gender distinctions);

Effective Communication Skills

Mailing Address: 3005 Colony Park Drive
Pearl, MS 39208

Phone: 601 4203701

Availability: Can present multiple sessions